A comment on the (yet again) rough days innocent people go through. Brought to us via a tsunami of images and footages.

From "The Balcony" a play by Jean Genet (1956)

After a staged photographic session of bishops, generals and judges, the Queen is informed:

THE ENVOY : It's a true image, born of a false spectacle.

FIRST PHOTOGRAPHER (cynically) : That's common practice, your Majesty. When some rebels were captured, we paid a militiaman to bump off a chap I'd just sent to buy me a packet of cigarettes. The photo shows a rebel shot down while trying to escape.

THE QUEEN: Monstrous!

*THE ENVOY : But have things ever happened otherwise? History was lived so that a glorious page might be written, and then read. It's reading that counts.

Let them understand who can!
